The First Thirty-five Years

THE GENEALOGICAL MAGAZINE OF NEW JERSEY is now more than thirty-five years old. As we present to the public an index covering those years, it is fitting to review the contribution of this magazine to the field of New Jersey genealogy and local history.

In July of 1925 its first number appeared, followed through the end of 1960 by 140 more, forming thirty-five annual volumes, each with a surname index. If one were to bind these together within a single set of covers, the product would be an ungainly book some fourteen inches thick, containing 3738 pages, plus the thirty-five indexes totaling perhaps another 350 pages.

So much for waist measure! How about the inner virtues?

This opus of thirty-five volumes contains over eight hundred different genealogical articles and other contributions, the smallest less than a page long, the largest being an outstanding feature which ran serially for nine years. Included are the inscriptions from 197 cemeteries, copies of 29 church records, genealogical accounts of 134 families, so-called Bible records of about 304 family units, 82 other miscellaneous genealogical features (among them eight concerned with Revolutionary War soldiers); ten series of public marriage records (state, county, and local); and finally, various fillers and editorial items.

Over the years, this growing profusion has brought confusion in its wake. As one number after another was published, the Magazine's cumulative value increased steadily, but so did the difficulty of using it effectively. Today no one can remember adequately the contents of those 3738 pages. Nor is much relief to be found in the thirty-five annual indexes available.

The present publication is a single index covering all thirty-five volumes. With it, the resources of the Magazine can be used quickly, thoroughly, and (we feel confident to add) accurately.*

Most readers will be familiar with indexes of this general type. It is a key, in one alphabetical sequence, to (1) the chief subject or sub-

*In the preparation of this index, much effort has been expended in the pursuit of maximum accuracy. After endless checking, it seems a reasonable hope that any errors which may have survived the purge (no compilation escapes them all, alas) are at a tolerable, negligible minimum.

jects of each article or contribution; and (2) the names of authors or contributors. Example: A short genealogy of the Aaronsons forms part of a series by the late Charles C. Gardner. This is covered by an index entry under "Aaronson family," and of course there is an entry for the compiler too.†

Concerning proper forms of entry, innumerable decisions must be made by the compiler of an index, even one such as the present, which is largely based on personal and geographic names. When it has been necessary to decide among variant spellings of a surname, weight has usually been given to the commonest form. For names of localities, the correct modern form has been used as far as possible. Whatever the case, cross-references have been made from the forms not used to the ones used (e.g., "Aileward, see Alward," and "Deckertown, see Sussex").

Churches are entered under the names of their respective localities (e.g., "Cranbury: First Presbyterian Church"), with cross-references from their own names, if the latter are distinctive (such as St. James Episcopal Church). The basic entry for cemetery inscriptions is also under name of locality, followed by the sub-entry, "gravestone inscriptions" (thus: "Bloomfield gravestone inscriptions: Reformed churchyard"). Here, too, cross-references have been made from the cemeteries' own names, if distinctive (e.g., "Layton family burying ground, see Bevans gravestone inscriptions").

If this index has any special quality about it, that quality lies in the elaborate network of cross-references which tie together all the geographical entries. Under the name of each county are "see" and "see also" references to all the townships and incorporated cities, within that county, for which there are entries in the index. Under the name of each township there are references to the localities within that township for which entries occur. (Thus: "Bergen County localities, see Dumont; Franklin Lakes [etc.]"; and "Readington Township gravestone inscriptions, see also Readington; White House; White

†In the case of a continued article, the author's or contributor's name is indexed for only one installment (the first) in each volume. Mr. Gardner's "Genealogical Dictionary" furnishes a good example. It began in volume 10, on page 25, and the index gives this pagination under his name as compiler, but none for a second installment in the same volume. In volume 11 the series continues, with four installments, of which again only the first is author-indexed. And so on. This is the one deviation from total coverage in the present index.

House Station"). Many references will also be found from one locality to another which lies particularly near, in an adjacent township.*

With this network of references, the historian or genealogist interested in an entire county can locate material not only about the county at large, but also about the component municipalities. Likewise, one who is interested in a single township is led to material about the towns within its bounds. Finally, the person interested in one certain town can determine, by means of the cross-references, what records of nearby localities are published in the Magazine—which may, of course, include information about his own town and its residents.

But enough has been said about the index. Suffice it to add the hope that users will find satisfaction in it and that the Magazine—all its 3738 pages—will be rendered significantly more valuable by it.

*For example, under "South Brunswick Township church records" is a reference to the Kingston Presbyterian Church just over the line in Franklin Township.

THE INDEX

To eliminate all imaginable sources of confusion to the user, few abbreviations have been employed on the following pages. Of these, two require explanation: After the name of a person listed, the years of his birth, or death, or both, are inserted within parentheses—Smith, John (1743-1805), or (b. 1743), or (d. 1805). When the available date is indefinite, it is used with the abbreviation "c." (circa, "about")—thus, "Jones, William (d. *c.*1840)" means that he died "about 1840." When no birth or death date is available at all, the individual's flourish-dates are given—"Wilkens, Jason (*fl.*1743-52)" means that he is known to have been living (flourishing) as early as 1743 and as late as 1752.

References to volume and page are made by the method commonly used in indexes. The first entry below, for example, indicates that something about Christopher Aarons will be found on page 73 of Volume 20 of the Genealogical Magazine. In other words, the volume number comes first, followed by the page number, which is separated from it by a colon. From the second entry it appears that there is something about the Aaronson family in Volume 10, on pages 28 through 31, inclusive.
